

Lesson 21: Persuasive presentation

HS192 Introduction to Writing - 2
@ IITGN, 2025-26

Your group has been decided!

Today's learning objective

Develop a topic for persuasive presentation

Three more weeks to go

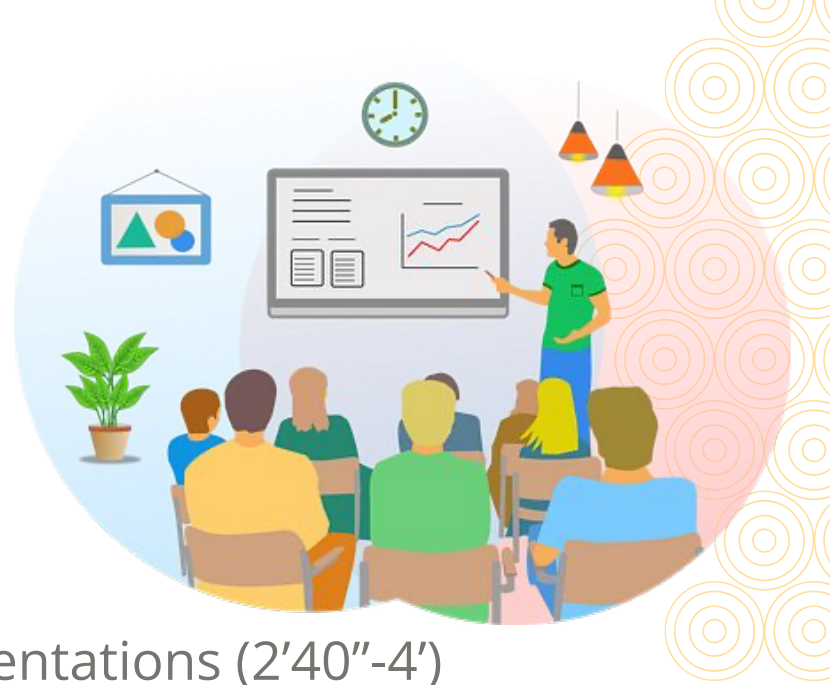

Lesson 21: Persuasive writing

Lesson 22: Visual element

Lesson 23: Public speech

Lesson 24: Presentation day Pair presentations (2'40"-4')

Lesson 25: Presentation day Pair presentations (2'40"-4')

Persuasive presentation

Persuasive writing seeks to convince its readers to embrace the point-of-view presented by appealing to the audience's reason and understanding through argument and/or entreaty.

Source: https://owl.purdue.edu/owl/resources/teaching_resources/effective_persuasion_presentation.html

Consider a topic or an idea that you want to publicly advertise, which

- is interesting (or potentially so),
- has a value to discuss,
- and is controversial in the sense that not everyone knows about it or believe it.

Your presentation will cover

- ❑ The persuasive context
- ❑ The role of the audience
- ❑ What to research and cite
- ❑ How to establish your credibility

We encounter persuasion every day

- TV Commercials
- Letters to the editor
- Junk mail
- Magazine ads
- College brochures

Can you think of other persuasive contexts?

Your organization needs funding for a project.

Your boss wants you to make recommendations for a course of action.

You need to shift someone's current point of view to build common ground so action is taken.

Your persuasion may be roughly...

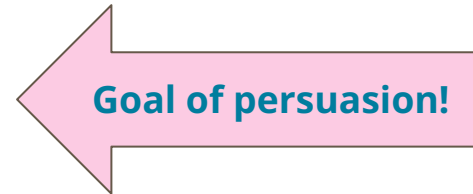

Observation and reflection under a certain system.

Some item or phenomenon that has caught your eyes.

Valuable theories backed up by relevant data.

Anything you want to say..

So that your colleagues and friends have a chance to change their viewpoints or actions in a desirable way.

Understand your audience

Who is the audience?

What beliefs do they hold about the topic?

What disagreements might arise between you and your audience?

How can you refute counterarguments with respect?

What concerns does your audience face?

- Do they have limited funds to distribute?
- Do they feel the topic directly affects them?
- How much time do they have to consider your proposal?

Help your audience related to your topic

Appeal to their hearts as well as their minds

- Use anecdotes when appropriate
- Paint your topic in with plenty of detail

Find common ground with your audience, for example:

- Point of opposition: You might support a war, whereas your audience might not.
- Common ground: Both sides want to see their troops come home

Research your topic to relate your audience

Become familiar with all sides of the issue. You can try to

- Find common ground
- Understand the history of the topic
- Find strong support for your own perspective.

Predict counterarguments your audience might make, for example:

- Your argument: Organic produce from Big Basket is better than store-bought produce.
- The opposition: Organic produce is too expensive.

Support your perspective

Appeal to logos

- Use statistics and reputable studies.

Cite experts on the topic

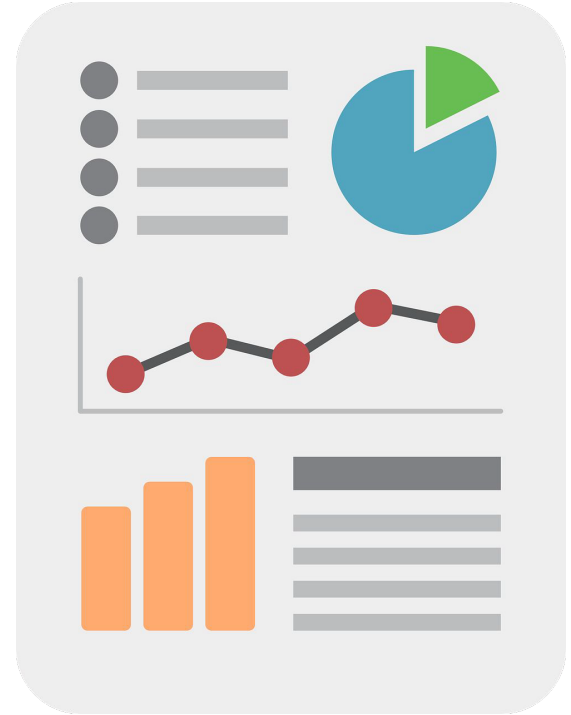

- Do they back up what you say?
- Do they refute the other side?

Which source would a reader find more credible?

The Indian Express
<http://www.myopinion.com>

Which person would a reader find more credible?

Manoj Sharma, South Delhi
Dr. Manoj Sharma, IIT Delhi

Tactics to avoid

Don't lecture or talk down to your audience.

Don't make threats of “bully” your audience.

Don't employ guilt trips.

Be careful if using the second person, “you”.

Work with your partner

- Is there anything you want to say recently? Use this opportunity to defined your topic.
 - Observation and reflection under a certain system.
 - Some item or phenomenon that has caught your eyes.
 - Valuable theories backed up by relevant data.
- Make sure the aspects of your topic
 - Interesting (to you, at least), Valuable (worth talking about), and Controversial (not commonsensical to people).
 - Consider the audience and persuasive context
- Work individually; collective brainstorming will follow.

Parify

Your initial idea can be developed better with friends having other sets of eyes. Especially, they will be greatly helpful to identify potential counterarguments and define audience.

Take turns, spending 4 minutes per each member in

1. Topic (it can be broad now)
2. Potential persuasive context
3. Potential target audience
 - a. What are their demographic information?
 - b. What are their interests, desires, and fears?

Debrief

What topic have you chosen? Share your selection with expected contextual information.

What kind of help did you give to your groupmates?

What kinds of help did you receive from your groupmates?

Summary: Components for effective persuasion

1. Understand your audience
2. Support your opinion
3. Know the various sides of your issue
4. Respectfully address other points of view
5. Find common ground with your audience
6. Establish your credibility

Suggested structure of your presentation

Part 1: Introduce: Grab attention and tell the audience what your topic is. Briefly propose actions, if there are.

Part 2: Define: Give background and tell your audience why your topic matters.

Part 3: Elaborate: Give detailed information of key points in an organized way.

Part 4: Conclude: Summarize with key takeaways and restate your proposal, if there is.

Structure of slides

The main part of your project will be your speech and script.

If you would like to maximize the delivery with slides, please use Google slides. The slides are expected to follow your general structure:

- Cover
- Part 1: Introduce
- Part 2: Define
- Part 3: Elaborate
- Part 4: Conclude
- References

Homework

Fix your topic with contextual information (i.e., audience and context) before next class.

Think about logos, pathos, and ethos appeals for your opinion.

Next class, we will begin creating slides. Bring your device if possible.